

KristieAnne Reed

KristieAnne Reed is a highly regarded television executive and producer in the Hollywood entertainment community. Known for her creative savvy, strong relationships, and production expertise, she currently holds the position of CEO of Jerry Bruckheimer Television, overseeing the development and production of all network, cable and streaming television series for the company.

Her work is amongst the best known and most exciting television in recent history. These include titles from the “CSI” franchise, “Cold Case,” “Without a Trace,” “Fire Country,” fan-favorite “Lucifer” and the Emmy Award-winning “The Amazing Race,” to name just a few. In her previous role as senior vice president of feature films for Jerry Bruckheimer, she spearheaded production of such blockbusters as “Pirates of the Caribbean,” “National Treasure” and “Remember the Titans.”

KristieAnne was raised in Pittsburgh where she attended Bishop Canevin Catholic High School. She went on to attend Carnegie Mellon’s College of Fine Arts, completing the School of Drama’s prestigious John Wells Directing Program and earning her BFA in drama in 1994. An internship working on a Disney production after graduation led her to the realization that producing was her forte.

KristieAnne has served on the university’s Advisory Board for the Master of Entertainment Industry Management program since its founding. In addition, KristieAnne gives back to the Carnegie Mellon community by providing internship and job opportunities to students and alumni. In 2019, she founded the Reed Family Broadcast Studio at Bishop Canevin. She is also a volunteer for Girls Inc., a charity that empowers girls and young women to be smart, bold and strong.
